BUFFALO.

ly legitimate. Denovan chose to be offended. He met Wallace several times the tollowing winter about Pittsburg and refused to speak to him. This stuck in Roderick's throat. When Donovan joined St. Louis he forgot all about the old trouble, but Wallace did not. Of course, it was a small thing, could be easily adjusted, but it caused friction at the time. On the whole, not any player on the St. Louis team, always bar Young, is particularly bound to the club owners by any tie save that of sordid self interest, which, after all, is the only indissoluble the known to baseball.

did self interest, which, after all, is the only indissoluble the known to baseball.

"I am against the new amendments to the National League rule all the way from A to Z." says Joe Quinn. "The best thing that can be said about them is that they shorten the games. Now, despite all this hectic cry from hypochondriacal baseball writers, the games were not too long. No public exhibition takes less time than baseball. Of course, it may be all very well to talk about saving all the precious time we can, that we may keep our noses to the hot trail of the almighty dollar. Yet might not dramatte entertainments be shortened by less interval between acts; might not horse racing be shortened by less times between races; might we not save time at dinner by standing up so that our meals would go down faster? The man who cannot spare two hours time from dollar-chasing cannot spare an hour. We are always considering the dollar at the expense of the game. I cannot see how the new rules will help the men who use their brains to play ball. Take that rule which makes it incumbent upon the pitcher to pitch the ball twenty seconds after he receives it. It will handleap men like Griffith and McGinnity, who rely upon strategy and cleverness. Such men must have time to think a bit and figure up close situations. On the other hand, it will not but hurt fellows who use only their arms in pitching. I figure that anything which handleaps brains hurts the game.

"Again I deny that the rule making hitby-pitcher a ball, instead of a base on balls, helps the good pitchers as much as it does the bad ones. The wild pitchers will not be penalized as much as they were, and fear of them will drive a good batter away from the plate. Batters will fear the wild fellow and will not stand up for him. Then when a boy with good control comes along, the batters will stand up for him and he suffers unless he deliberately drives them away. The rule helps the bad pitchers and any rule which tends to encourage incompetence and punish competence, is in itself new rules, save the one about fouls tend to handicap the batter. The batting has been light enough. Batting is what the people want to see.

"Under the new pitching rules I look for such clever fellows as Nichols, Griffith, McGinnity, Donohue, Tannehill and Leever to be handicapped, while wild, strong-armed boys, such as Waddell, Seymour and others, will be helped by them. Any rule which handicaps a clever man is primarily unfair.
"As for the rule which makes a foul-hit ball, bounding within certain limitations, a strike, it hurts batting very much. In keeping men like McGraw, Thomas, Burkett, Donovan, Hamilton, Keeler, Jennings, Sheekard, Jones and others of that lik from batting off incipient strikes into fouls the rule may work well. But will it work. Thomas will not be much affected, for he can bat them right to the back-stop, which will help him when the catcher is up under the bat. No doubt McGraw, Hamilton, Burkett, Donovan and the rest will be able to bat them foul into such territory as is deemed legitimate. That may render the rule ineffective. The fact that the new rules compel the catcher to stay up under the bat makes the batting of fouls less dangerous. Again, as far as I can see, there is no rule which differentiates between fouling off a good strike or a bad ball. The rule is meant to punish the fouling off of strikes. Yet, as I understand it, if a man reaches after a wide one he cannot be intending to foul off an imminent strike. He may be helping along that pretty play, a-hit-and-run, or he may be hopestly trying to sacrifice.

"Taken from any possible point of view, the rules are not good. At best, but ten or twelve men made a specialty of hitting off good ones. These ten, about one or two to a team, made little difference. But to catch McGraw, Thomas Hamilton and one or two to a team, made little difference. But to catch McGraw, Thomas Hamilton and one or two to a team, made little difference. But to catch McGraw, Thomas Hamilton and one or two to a team, made little difference But to catch handicap. I am a firm believer in the theory and practice which provides for the sur-vival of the fittest. I do not want to see strong men made weak men by handicaps, nor do I want to see weak men made weaksame is being ruined by considera-

"The same is being ruined by consideration of the dollar. The cry is, "Please the public.' I cry, 'Make the game, without regard for the public and the public will like it better. Make the game as perfect as you can from an artistic and spectacular point of view, and no matter how long or how short it is, it will please the public."

"You just watch these new rules operate. If that foul ball rule does not hurt the weak batters come around and get anything I have got. If that rule which makes a hit-by-pitcher just a ball does not cause more riots, more fights and trouble than has ever been seen on a diamond, I'll give you my undertaking business and accept therefor a compilmentary ticket on the hog train. If that twenty seconds rule does not hurt the great pitchers I'll jump off the earth."

Tell-Tale Letter.
When Triola was searched in the Elizabeth Street Police Station letters were found on him, which were turned over to Coroner Succa this morning, and are quite enough, the police say, to prove that Triola had pre-meditated murder. One letter reads as foltrue to me this would not have occurred."

Girl Was Not Frightened.

But Mamie Cirelli was not at all frightened by what Triola said. She was used to that sort of thing, being of the sort to agitate the hearts of impressionable young men, and besides one must expect to put up with such annoyances in return for having the fun of being called back a half dozen times after every song and of getting big bunches of red and yellow roses every other night. And so she and her mother, who was quite as chic and almost as young and pretty as she, did their turn last night in the theater behind the cafe at No. 109 Mulberry street with just as much cheerfulness and vivacity as though there were not all sorts of rumors out in the audience that there was to be some shooting or stabbing before morning. Last Sunday night young Triola chased the girl down Bayard street from Mulberry street almost to the Bowery because she said she would never go to live with him, and ever since then these rumors of approaching tragedy had hung in the air.

The Cirelli sisters, or at least one of them, probably sang all the better for this excitement of which she was the cause, and whon the lights were out, the people gone, and they and their escort ready to go home, Mamie carried a big bunch of roses.

Without any wasted time or wasted words, he leaped toward the girl who carried the red and yellow roses and thrust a revolver into her face. The flash and the report instantly followed and the girl dropped her flowers and fell face forward. The murderer caught her as she fell thus, and, burying the muzzle of the revolver in her heavy hair, he fired again. Then he fired two more shots to make sure, none of which hit her, and ran.

Policeman William Rogers heard the shots and found the mother with her daughter's head in her hands, wiping the blood from the forehead, moaning and praying and calling the girl by name.

Leaving the mother and dying daughter, the policeman traced the murderer to the calking of chickens betrayed his presence. Mrs. Warner sued on account of the death of her husband, who was killed January 24, 1990, by a car of the defendant in Webster Groves. and a manufacturing interest of great importance.

The Mayfield Woolen Mills of this city have procured an option on the Old Kentucky mills of Louisville. The papers concluding the transfer will probably be signed to-day or to-morrow at the latest. The Mayfield Woolen Mills moved their salesroom from Mayfield to St. Louis last April, and their main office in October. The proprietors are so impressed with the advantages of St. Louis as a distributing center that they have purchased the Louisville establishment and will remove the plant and such portion of the machinery as is available, to this city. They propose to secure a site of from two to four acres and construct a large woolen factory. The buildings just purchased occupy a site a little in excess of two acres.

The present capital stock of the Mayfield Woolen Mills is $300,000, about one-half that amount surplus. Plans are under way to increase the capital stock to a sum not less than $600,000.
